

Abstract

A method is presented that will identify molecular markers useful for detecting metastasized tumors in mammals. The method comprises identifying candidate molecular markers that are associated with terminal differentiation in the tissue in which a tumor arises, and identifying candidate molecular markers that 5 continues to be expressed in the tumors from that tissue but not in the biopsy tissue.